The Sheetlines Index

Introduction

I am not a professional indexer, but an enthusiastic map collector. My approach to creating this index has been to look through every article and try to identify all topics to which readers might wish to refer. This has often led to multiple entries for any one topic so that they may be accessed in a number of ways, and this has tended to make a rather large index. However I trust that this will not deter users.

The index is divided it into four parts:

- Part 1 Index by subject,
- Part 2 Index of maps and series in order of scale,
- Part 3 Index of articles by title, in author order,
- Part 4 Index of reviews of publications.

‘New Maps’ are not listed in the index, except where there is a general description of a particular map/series, as a listing appears in most issues of Sheetlines.

Article titles, where they do not give an indication of content, will not be found in Part 1; neither will titles of reviewed publications. However, in the latter case, if the review includes some OS relevant subject information, the topic will appear in Part 1.

The index entry 27/15 will be found in Sheetlines 27, page 15, and would be the first mention of a topic within an article. An entry 27/15, 45 would find an additional reference on page 45, in a different article.

A small number of initials have been used to keep individual lines short, e.g. ‘Ordnance Survey’ is shewn as OS. Abbreviations have been used where that is the common usage, e.g. ‘Trig points’.

Acknowledgement must be given to the work previously undertaken by Tim Nicholson whose indexing of Sheetlines 1-45 has been used as a start point.

Any errors, omissions and inconsistencies in this index are entirely my fault. I would be grateful if any comments, suggestions, errors and omissions are sent to me:

If appropriate, it is intended to issue an Amendment sheet at the end of 2004.
